

My dear Sir, Paris 17 December 1837.
By the account current hereto enclosed, you will perceive, that of the various sums remitted and expended, there remains on hand yet due to the agent of the United States, the sum of Seventeen hundred and Sixty Eight francs and two sous of France which I shall instruct my son to pay over to you shortly, probably by the sailing of the next packet from ~~Paris~~ here to New York - As the Remittance have perhaps been debited on the Books of the Bank, you will please advise me of the arrival of the four Cases of Instruments, sent by the Formosa, saying at same time, that the money remitted, had been accounted for, and the transaction fully closed - This will be formal, as in the case of change, your daughter will have no knowledge of the transaction, but such as is afforded by the Books of the Institution. I have yet had no official advice of the arrival of the Cases by the Packet Ship, but I do not doubt they arrived at due time I remain your obedient servant James M. Smith

My Dear Sir,

By the account current here issued you will perceive that of the various sums remitted and dispensed, there remains on hand yet due to the mint of the United States, the sum of Seventeen hundred and Sixty-eight francs and two sous of France, which I shall instruct my son to pay over to you shortly – probably by the sailing of the next packet from Havre to New York. As the remittances have perhaps been debited on the books of the Mint, you will please advise me of the arrival of the four casks of instruments, sent by the formaton, saying at same time that the money remitted, has been accounted for, and the transaction fairly closed – this will be formal, as is the cash of change, your successor will have no knowledge of the transaction, but such as is afforded by the books of the Institution. I have yet had no official advices of the arrival of the case xxx by the Packet Ship Sully, tho' that vessel arrived in due time. I remain your obedient servant,
Samuel Fisher.
